JOHN E. WEST DIES MORNING AFTER GILEAD ACCIDENT

John E. West died in a Berlin hospital Friday morning, where he was taken after his plane had crashed to the ice on the Androscoggin River after hitting the power wires near the farm of A. R. Mason & Sons in Gilead the evening before.

Mr. West, manager of the Berlin Airport, was en route from Massachusetts with a new Piper Cub, accompanied in another new plane by Dr. and Mrs. Francis Appleton of Gorham. Shortly before the accident they had stopped at Song Pond and called Berlin to learn weather conditions, and West had just signalled for another landing when his plane struck the wires. Dr. and Mrs. Appleton landed nearby and gave first aid and Mrs. Appleton called help from the Mason home.

Mr. West was born in Berlin in 1906, the son of the late John and Emily West. He was a graduate of Berlin High School and Lincoln Flying School. He had over 4000 flying hours and had taught more than 100 to fly.

He married Miss Lorraine Martin of Berlin, who survives. He also leaves three sisters, Mrs. Jack Rodgerson and Mrs. Pearl MacKenzie of Berlin and Mrs. Florence Elliott of Groveton, N. H.

TROOP COMMITTEE FORMED —E. A. VAN SCOUTMASTER

At a meeting held at the Legion Rooms Wednesday evening Eugene A. Van Den Kerkhoven was chosen Scoutmaster, with Edwin Brown and Irving Brown assistants. Committee for the year was formed as follows: Syll LeClair, chairman, Arthur Cutler, Milo McAllister, John Butts, Henry Bennett, Earl Davis, Irving Carver. The meeting was in charge of Mr. Snooks, scout executive, of Rumford. An oyster stew supper was served before the meeting under the direction of Milo McAllister.

LURVEY—FULLER

A wedding of interest was solemnized at high noon Saturday at the home of Miss Ruth A. Tucker, West Paris, when Miss Leona Fuller of Hanover and Harold A. Lurvey of Rumford were united in marriage by Rev. Eleanor B. Forbes. The single ring service was used. They were attended by the bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Jennie Currier of Portland, and his aunt, Mrs. Ada Barden of West Paris.

Mrs. Lurvey is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Fuller of Errol, N. H., and was educated in the schools of Upton. She is a practical nurse. Mr. Lurvey is the son of Mrs. Jennie Currier and the late Frederick T. Lurvey. He was graduated from Woodstock High School and is employed as a machinist at the Oxford Paper Co., Rumford.

After a wedding trip to Boston they will reside at Hanover. Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served by the Misses Ruth and Eva Tucker, which included a wedding cake made by the bridegroom's mother.

Seventy-five mowing machines were overhauled at 21 repair demonstrations conducted by the Maine Extension Service last year. At an average cost of only a few dollars for new parts these mowing machines were said by many of their owners to work "like new." Two hundred and thirty-eight men attended the demonstration, learning how to make adjustments and replacements.

600 at Legion Patriotic Meet

The public patriotic program, sponsored by the Jackson-Silver Post and Unit Saturday evening, Feb. 22, at the West Paris gymnasium was a success even though everybody was disappointed that the Governor was unable to attend. A telegram from him was read, stating the pressure of State business prevented his attendance.

Following the advancement of the flags and pledge of allegiance Mrs. Libby offered prayer, then there was 30 seconds of silence for our departed heroes. Dept. Vice-Pres. Fannie Cummings gave a brief address of welcome and Rev. Alton Verrill gave the charge to the Flag.

Sickness prevented some of the schools from attending but those who did furnish numbers were Greenwood City, Locke Mills, So. Woodstock, Bryant Pond, North Paris, South Paris, and both West Paris Grammar and High Schools. All showed much work on the part of their teachers.

Dept. Commander Paul Jullien of Waterville, also representing the Governor, being on his staff, was the principal speaker.

State Commander George Jones of the G. A. R., of Oxford, our only Oxford County Civil War veteran, attended a little while in honor of the 10 local National Guard boys who were leaving shortly for a year's training in Florida. These fine looking boys in uniform were called to the stage and given an ovation by the big crowd, and County Commander Cummings expressed to them the good wishes of the community.

The West Paris and South Paris school orchestras, led by Mrs. Shaw, gave a concert prior to the meeting and during the intermission.

American flags were presented to South Woodstock School, West Paris Gymnasium, the new Junior Unit, and to the Post to use on the flag pole at the Legion Home.

Harold Perham spoke in behalf of the community expressing their appreciation of the time and effort put into this outstanding inspiring meeting. After words of thanks for contributions were voiced. America sang, and the colors retired. R. V. M. Forbes pronounced the benediction.

A large delegation of the local BSA Unit acted as escort to the Governor's representative and the Scouts were on hand as messengers. Alanson Cummings, Oxford County Commander, was master of ceremonies.

Bethel Citizen

Dear Editor

As a taxpayer of Bethel and a subscriber for your paper I wish to call your attention to an article in your last week's edition Feb. 20th. You state in this article that there were no overdrafts in the town accounts of last year 1940. I am sure the Selectmen have not read this article as they also would object to a false impression going out to the voters of Bethel. There were overdrafts in the different departments in 1940 of $2110.10 as shown by the Town report that has just come out.

Sincerely

HENRY W. BOYKER

This statement referred to was supported by the balance sheet as printed on pages 41 and 42 of the report. —Editor.

GOULD UPSETS OXFORD 33-29

After playing a dismal brand of ball at Norway last Tuesday where they lost a 27-13 game, the team suddenly came to life and played real basketball to upset a favored Oxford team 33-29. Delano, big 6 ft. 4 in. center for the visitors, has been the star offensive man for Oxford all year and proved himself a dangerous man at Gould. However, Blanchard did a fine job against him as he held Delano to five goals and two free throws for 12 points while scoring 14 for himself. Sid Howe with 11 points for Gould and Martin with 10 for Oxford were the other heavy scorers.

La Libre Belgique

La Libre Belgique (Free Belgium) was one of the most famous of the "underground" newspapers during the first World War. Despite the persistent efforts of the German army of occupation, the newspaper was published and circulated at irregular intervals for more than three years. It was read eagerly by the Belgians, circulation rising at one point to 25,000 copies, although there were heavy penalties for mere possession of a copy.

In April, 1916, the plant was discovered by the Germans in a vacant factory in Brussels where it had operated under their noses for more than a year. Despite the mass arrests that followed, the paper continued to appear with a new editor and a new plant.

Magnesite Stucco.

QUESTION: Some 17 years ago I stuccoed my house with magnesite stucco. The metal lath has started to show through and some cracks are appearing. I am trying to find a finish which will be nearly like the present gray to contrast with the red tile roof.

ANSWER: Once magnesite stucco has begun to disintegrate, there is no permanent method of stopping this condition. The only remedy is to remove the present stucco and re-finish with a good portland cement stucco. You can get the desired color from one of the makers of colored stucco.

Renovating.

QUESTION: In doing over an old farmhouse, I intend to strip walls and ceilings of all lath and plaster, and to run necessary pipes and conduits before replastering. Would it be better to use wood or metal lath? There is no heat, and I do not expect to put it in at once, but will install risers for steam or hot water while the plaster is off. Would you prefer steam or hot water? Why?

ANSWER: For a house that is to be occupied only occasionally, I should prefer some form of circulating warm air. With both steam and hot water, all water would have to be drained off on leaving, and on opening up the house, it would be many hours before the system could be filled and the radiators heated. With warm air, all of this would be avoided. Do not overlook the need for putting good metal weatherstrips on all windows and outside doors.

Vegetable Storeroom.

QUESTION: Please give me the requirements for building a cold room for the storage of fruit, vegetables, etc.

ANSWER: Enclose the area to be used for the storage room with a rigid insulating board. Use four-inch studding, and cover both sides of the walls with the insulating board. A small window in the partition will help ventilate the storage room. The window should not be opened so wide as to permit the warm air of the cellar to get into the cold room. The walls and boards could be painted with aluminum paint to keep any possible dampness from damaging the insulating board, as well as provide additional insulation. The door must fit snugly in the wall.

Fireplace Hearth.

QUESTION: The specifications call for a fire brick floor in a fireplace. Instead, the builder has laid a concrete floor, claiming this is more heat resisting than the fire brick. We have our doubts about this and would like your opinion.

ANSWER: Fire brick might be more satisfactory for the purpose. However, if the concrete was laid in sufficient thickness and proper proportions it should prove serviceable.

Painting a House.

QUESTION: In painting a frame house, is it advisable to put on a coat of aluminum paint first? If so, why? Is it more costly than ordinary paint?

ANSWER: Aluminum paint is most widely used for a priming coat on new wood surfaces. It makes an excellent base for the following coats of paint. In repainting it is not necessary. Aluminum paint does not cost more than ordinary paints.

Fireproofing Paper.

QUESTION: How can paper be made fireproof?

ANSWER: Soak it in a solution of 8 ounces boracic acid and 10 ounces borax in 1 gallon of water. Float the paper on the liquid until thoroughly saturated, and then hang up to drip and dry.

Stains in a Sink.

A correspondent writes that stains can be removed from porcelain sinks by sprinkling chlorinated lime in the sink in the evening. By morning all spots so treated and sprinkled will disappear.

HALF the fun of hooking rugs is in making your own designs. All you have to do is to mark the pattern on burlap with a wax crayon and then go over it with a warm iron to set it. Simple flowers are easy to draw and in the olden days real leaves were used for patterns. Scroll designs combined with flowers are popular now for use with Eighteenth century furniture. The scrolls of the handsome rug shown here were hooked in gold color outlined in

This diagram shows you how to make a scroll pattern that you may use in different ways. Just rule a piece of paper in one-inch squares and then follow the diagram outlining the scroll so that its lines cross the squares exactly as they do here. Now, cut the scroll out and trace around it on the burlap repeating it at each corner; then fill in the flowers.

Wearing of Khaki

It is believed that English soldiers in India started the vogue of wearing khaki uniforms about a century ago when they dipped their white uniforms into muddy pools to give them protective coloration, says Pathfinder. The name khaki, in fact, comes from the Urdu word, Khak, meaning dust. The practice led to the official adoption of khaki-colored uniforms by the British army in the Egyptian campaign of 1882.

The bullying note left Shannon's voice as she looked at him.

"Right you are, Miss Paget," he granted and turned to his assistant. "We'll be going over it, Al. Miss Paget, is there a bathroom handy? We'll make a bit of mess here."

Miss Agatha rang for Annie. They followed the maid down the hall. Cochrane looked reproachfully at me and more sympathetically at aunt and niece, who sat still and stiff in their anxiety. The silence grew unbearable. Jerry said at last:

"And I thought I had something!"

Allegro did not seem to hear him. Rigid and intent she watched the doorway.

Miss Agatha asked:

"And it has no importance now?"

Cochrane had forgotten his pre-tense of indifference. He frowned and shrugged.

"It may, or it may not," he grumbled, "according to what Shannon finds on that knife. Dave has told you of the mysterious siren who called on him?"

"No," said Miss Agatha wryly. "I've always understood gentlemen don't talk of such things."

Cochrane grinned at her in admiration.

I muttered:

"It didn't seem important."

"That was one of the things," Jerry went on, "that made me think it might be. The night our bright young friend was jumped in the basement, the night that knife was lost, Dave had a call from a dark young woman who wouldn't leave her name with the landlady, good Mrs. Shaw, who has a stern sense of virtue and, what is better, an eagle eye and an eleventh-century memory.

"Because," said Cochrane, resuming his sleepy air, "she has recognized the picture of Irene Ferriter in the Sphere as Dave's would-be visitor. There seems to be no question about the identification. Mrs. Shaw is positive. Why should Lyon Ferriter's beloved sister want to see you, Dave?"

Allegro looked at me and turned away. I did not answer at once. Her glance and the derivative emphasis laid by Cochrane on "beloved" had thrust an idea into my mind. It was so fantastic that I tried to evict it but it stayed while I said:

"You can search me."

"That's been done already," Cochrane croaked, "by the late Mr. Ferriter who was looking for that very knife. Dave, could it have been a woman in the basement that night?"

His question chimed in so neatly with the idea I had branded an idioty that I gaped at him a moment.

"I don't know," I answered at last.

"No?" Cochrane asked. "I just wondered, Dave. Don't let it agitate you, laddie."

But the question had rocked me. The wonder it had started did not subside and I heard, with odd indifference, the clump of feet as Shannon and his aid came along the hall. Miss Agatha's head went up. I could see by Allegro's stiff face how tightly she held herself and even Cochrane forgot to look tired.

The thrust of Shannon's jaw, the little narrowed eyes that darted at each of us were ominous. He carried the knife no longer gingerly, even a little scornfully. No one dared to pry into his silence, until Cochrane drawled:

"All right, I'll ask it. What did you find, Captain?"

"Nothing," said Shannon in a bleak voice. I heard Allegro let go her breath. Miss Agatha repeated, almost in satisfaction:

"Nothing."

Shannon said to her: "That's probably blood on the blade. There are no fingerprints at all."

Cochrane hummed beneath his breath. Shannon glared at him, and went on, with aimless anger:

"There's a mark on the hill that might have been made by the fingers of a damp glove—a lady's glove."

Jerry glanced at me and let his eyes slide quickly away. The silence that followed was strangely filled with relief and disappointment.

Miss Agatha mused aloud: "He is very clever."

"Who?" Shannon snapped.

She seemed to hear suspicion of her nephew in the query. Her face hardened and she spoke slowly and purposefully.

"The murderer," she told the Captain. "Or if you want me to name him, Lyon Ferriter."

Shannon flinched at the word.

"How do you know?"

"How do I know?" asked Miss Agatha coldly. "How does Mr. Mallory know? How do you know yourself, Captain Shannon? By something that's worthless in court, Lyon Ferriter killed that man. He used that knife you hold. I don't know why. Perhaps to protect that precious sister of his, for whose sake he's willing to let an innocent and foolish boy play scapegoat."

At each word Miss Agatha spoke in her bitter, careful voice, my mad idea grew more normal in shape and color. It drove me to speech, but Shannon's harsh voice rode over my words.

"Miss Paget, whether you're right or wrong, no one can say. That was my own thought at first and now—"

He shrugged.

Cochrane completed it for him:

"And now," he said softly, "when you announce you've found the murder weapon, but no clue to how it got in the basement, or who left it there, you're through—whipped, outwitted, scuttled. Mr. Ferriter, who hasn't been sure where that knife has been, wins. He'll sleep easier from now on."

"All right," Shannon snarled in angry helplessness; "that's late most of the newspaper suggestions. It's a help, isn't it? What would you do, wise boy?"

Cochrane shook his head.

I heard Miss Agatha say:

"I know what I'd do."

We looked at her. Her face was hard and her voice, that spoke what I had feared to utter, was firm:

"If Lyon Ferriter has a weakness, it is his love for his sister. I think he can be reached by attacking her."

Shannon had not the sort of brain that is fired by abstract theory. There was scorn in his grunt.

"Would you then? And how?"

If the old lady's suggestion had rolled his mind, it had clarified mine. Her speech had been a key, unlocking the door of my mind behind which that wild, originally fantastic idea had waited. I said, before Miss Agatha could speak again:

"Arrest Irene Ferriter."

I had uttered her thought. I saw her start and look at me in wonder.

"Arrest her?" Shannon jeered.

His crooked smile was mocking. Allegro's eyes widened. Cochrane looked at me as though we were dozing. I stood there cumbrously.

"For murder. For the murder of Blackbeard. There's enough to make it stick—for a while."

"For a while," the policeman echoed in derision.

Miss Agatha said quickly, sitting straight and flushed in her wheel chair:

"Nothing."

Hoyt at the switchboard. I told him, as quickly as I could, what I wanted and why. He gasped and boggled and at last consented, when I reminded him of his earlier offer of aid. Then he whispered something that sent me hot-footing it up the stair again.

I saw when I re-entered the workroom that Shannon wavered.

"Personally, Captain Shannon."

Miss Agatha was saying, "I place justice above orthodoxy. The murderer was unconventional. Why shouldn't the arrest be equally so?"

I know he did it. You think he did.

If he didn't, Ione or Everett did and the two survivors are accessories after and, perhaps, before the fact. Are you always so—wedded to legal formality, Captain?"

Cochrane leaned forward.

"Listen," he wheedled, "what can you lose? Say it doesn't click. So what? Are you worse off? It's a crazy idea. Sure. But so is this whole set-up. We're trying to give you the chance to tear this case wide open—and solo at that. Do you want to be just a captain all your life?"

Shannon stared as though he wondered whether she had lost her mind. I prodded him further:

"Through her you can hit him where it'll hurt most. If you're game to carry through a bluff, you may break him."

Cochrane had caught my intention. I heard him mutter blasphemous approval. I felt Allegro's eyes on me, but I watched the policeman's smoldering doubt.

"It's your one chance," I told him. "Take it or leave it."

Miss Agatha started to speak.

Then she checked herself and I knew her nod meant that she surrendered her plan—our plan—to my keeping.

Shannon ruffled his hair and took two uneasy strides away from the desk. I started to speak again.

He said:

"Wait a minute. Al, close that door from the outside and don't let anyone come near it."

CHAPTER XIX

It took an hour to bend Shannon to the mad purpose. Miss Agatha and Cochrane were my allies. They followed my lead and, at need, took the lead themselves. We hammered the Captain with reasons, prodded him with persuasion, while he walked the floor as though he sought cover from our argument. All through the clash of voices and purposes. Allegro sat silent beside her aunt but the pent excitement reached her. Severity left her face. Color came to it and her eyes woke up and moved quickly from speaker to speaker. Sight of her helped me stand up to Shannon.

From the second when I lifted my voice, I knew the least faltering would emphasize the desperate fantasy I put forward. At first I feigned confidence, linking fact to fact in arbitrary union. Then, as I spoke, I converted myself. It seemed as though speech washed away mystery to bare at least coherent outlines.

Cochrane sat beside me. His innocent face was drowsy but his nimble mind kept pace with mine, endorsing my contentions, supplying pointed comment when Shannon balked. Miss Agatha said little, but her rare words cut. We outraged the policeman's sense of propriety and stripped that from him. We pried his mind loose from official procedure. He withheld us stubbornly, tramping to and fro, ruffling his hair, now and then shaking his head like a fly-pestered horse. He took that afternoon the sweating he and his associates had dealt to many.

"It's—it's illegal," he blurted at last with a cornered air and glared at Cochrane who chuckled.

"So," Jerry drawled, "is a length of rubber hose."

It was luck more than logic that broke Shannon at last. He raked his hair and shook his head again.

"Maybe," he granted, "it would make a good movie. But the girl has an alibi. You can't get over that. Somebody downstairs—Hoyt it was, saw her come in."

I got up. "If that's all that gags you," I said, "I'll see Hoyt. He'll back our play. His story will be that he didn't want to get a lady into trouble."

"For what?"

His crooked smile was mocking. Allegro's eyes widened. Cochrane looked at me as though we were dozing. I stood there cumbrously.

"For murder. For the murder of Blackbeard. There's enough to make it stick—for a while."

"For a while," the policeman echoed in derision.

Miss Agatha said quickly, sitting straight and flushed in her wheel chair:

"Nothing."

Hoyt body grew tense. In the wintry light, his face looked paler and thinner but it was as controlled as his voice.

"I'm sorry to break in on a conference, but the hallman said you wished to see me. Miss Paget."

His eyes questioned each of us. He must have read danger in our silence for he looked at me last and longest.

Miss Agatha said, quite tranquilly:

"Two calls in a day may be an imposition, Mr. Ferriter, but when I heard you were here, I thought it best that you come in."

"A pleasure," he said, with a little bow, but now he watched Shannon. "I was just getting some things my sister needs."

The silence stretched each second.

Shannon asked:

"And your sister, Mr. Ferriter. How is she?"

"Ill," Lyon replied. "Quite ill."

Again, the pause was hard to bear. Shannon cleared his throat.

"Mr. Ferriter, I've found out who killed your visitor."

Lyon might have been bronze. At last, he said:

"In the first place I'm not aware that he was my visitor. In the second place, if this is to be a police questioning, I must ask permission to call my lawyer."

"Sure," Shannon said and shoved the desk phone toward him. "Tell him to meet us at the Babylon and that I'm on my way up to arrest Irene Ferriter."

That name caught Lyon half-way across the floor and stopped him. He stared at Shannon, glanced at me and then smiled.

"Ione?" he asked lightly. "Arrest her?"

"Arrest her," Shannon repeated. "For murder. I'm sorry to break it to you so sharply, Mr. Ferriter—"

He made no further movement toward the telephone, but stood, looking hard at the policeman.

"What rot!"

The Captain pushed back his chair.

"No," he said. "Shall we go on up?"

"Surely," Lyon began and then his bluff broke. "You mustn't. She's ill, I tell you. You can't possibly think she had anything—"

The pain in his voice rang true. Shannon cut him off.

"I better give you the usual warning about whatever you say being used against you. I'm not sure whether you're accessory or not."

He paused. I was watching Lyon's hands. They hung at his sides, rigidly still. Shannon went on and I admired the confidence in his voice.

"She killed this guy—for reasons of her own. Then she came out into the hall yonder and hollered."

"I see," said Lyon. "And swallowed the knife."

"Listen," Shannon answered, "if I wasn't so certain I'd not be telling you. The next night after the murder, this Mallory here bumped into her in the basement hallway. In the dark."

Lyon's eyes touched mine for a split second. Then they returned to Shannon. I saw his hands clench and instantly hang lax again. His voice was amused.

"I see. He recognized her in the dark."

Shannon shook his head, immune to irony.

"No. He knew it was a woman, that's all. But a taxi driver saw her come out of the basement. She got into his cab. Here's his affidavit. Care to read it?"

He offered the paper Cochrane had set down at his dictation. Lyon half-reached for it, drew back and shook his head.

"I'm not interested," he said carefully. "It's a mistake. My sister was at the Babylon all that evening."

"I don't know now," Shannon went on, with narrowed eyes, "whether you really think so or not. Ferriter, she wasn't. She called at Mr. Mallory's boarding house. Mrs. Shaw, the landlady, identifies her, too. Right after that struggle in the basement, she went to see him."

Buy Your Drugs in a Drug Store

You don't buy your shoes in a hardware store
Or your gems at the Five and Ten;
It isn't the cobbler that fixes your teeth,
Or pulls out a snag, now and then.
You don't call a plumber to make you a suit
Or the ice man to bake you a pie;
A can of tomatoes won't do you much good
When you have a speck in your eye.
You get your stamps from the drug store man,
Break a bill for the telephone,
He delivers your messages, takes your calls
If you haven't a phone at home.
These are a few of the things he does,
Other favors he grants galore,
So why in the world, when you're buying drugs
Don't you trade in a real drug store?

A local flapper was overheard to whisper to another young thing in church: "I can't get along with my boy friend lately. He ignores me and if there's anything makes me hopping mad it's ignorance."

Sympathizer: Poor little fellow!
Where did that cruel boy hit you?

Little Boy: Boo, hoo! We was

THE LOW DOWN FROM HICKORY GROVE

You can get pretty near any kind of an answer there is, by asking the next person you meet what he thinks this country needs.
But also you will find out that everybody agrees on one thing the country does need something.

And that is a good sign and one thing to be thankful for and is O.
K. a good omen.

We been drowsing along, thinking everything was getting fixed.
But now if we are getting cobwebs out, like Mr. Rip Van Winkle when he got over his long nap, we will get our bearings yet.

All in all it looks pretty good. And if we can just stay awake now for another short spell, we will see there are not 100 reasons for the mess we are in—but only one reason.

And the reason is not so complicated—it is our ownself. There are more places to sleep than just in the Catskills.

Yours with the low down,

Prominent Screen Star

An exceptionally smart frock and suit combination is this week's fashion feature. It is in a class of its own and those who know and appreciate style will give it top honors wherever seen. The front fullness is cleverly worked in by means of gathering at the bodice and waistline. It is very flattering.
A white plique trim at the neck is always smart. When made removable, the open throat makes a fine background for jewelry. A patent belt goes full around over a smoothed waist, dividing the bodice and skirt fullness. The chiseled jacket has three-quarter length sleeves, and exquisite white plique lapels shot with embroidered circles. Navy or black are the best colors to contrast with the gleaming white trim.

eral services of his mother, Mrs.

By some means or other, the unlucky golfer had swallowed a golf ball. While the hospital surgeon got ready for an emergency operation, he said to the nurse:

"Who is that man pacing up and down the corridor a relative?"

"No, doctor," replied the nurse demurely. "He is the owner of the golf ball."

Farm Product Research Brightens Rural Picture

Government Chemurgic Laboratories Seek New Outlets for Raw Materials Of U. S. Agriculture.

By BAUKHAGE
National Farm and Home Hour Commentator.

WNU Service, 1395 National Press Bldg., Washington, D. C.

From four strategic points in the United States members of the department of agriculture are looking into the future and slowly and carefully planning the way toward new uses of the product of field and farm. They are the men directing the work in the new laboratories of the bureau of chemistry and engineering.

The layman who takes a quick look over the shoulders of these men may get a little dizzy. As I sat in the office of one of them taking notes with a pencil he had just handed me, labeled "U. S. Dept. Agr. Soybean-Phenolic Plastic" I had difficulty keeping down to earth. I saw the cornfields of my native state suddenly producing the fuel of tomorrow, I saw husks and cobs running farm and factory machinery and automobiles, and cornstalks turning into paper. Plants and vegetables from the farms of the nation became all sorts of gadgets from airplane parts to ash trays, a gallon of milk turned into a lady's dress, a pumpkin into a limousine.

At this point I was taken by the hand and led gently back to earth. I was reminded that "chemurgy," which is what the modern Aladdins call their art, is still in the list of "new words" in the dictionary. I looked it up. Chemurgy, I found, means "that branch of applied chemistry devoted to industrial utilization of raw materials, especially farm products, as use of soybean oil in paints and varnishes, and of southern pine for paper pulp."

Attack Surplus Problem.

That definition by no means gives the true picture of what the four laboratories of the department of agriculture are doing. In the first place it is necessary to point out that the government chemists are confining their research efforts to farm surpluses and to what is now waste. They are bending their efforts to discover new uses for farm products rather than trying to develop products to compete with present markets. The objective, reduced to purely material terms, is more cash for what the farmer raises.

The decision of the congress of the United States in 1938 to vote $4,000,000 for these four laboratories to carry on this research was not a sudden thing. It was the gradual realization that in this changing world, new conditions have proved that making two blades of grass grow where only one grew before, will not solve the farm problem. International trade restrictions, wars and rumors of wars, revolutions both economic and political, have conspired to create great surpluses of farm products. The job today is to find new markets for those products. It is a long-range job.

Dr. Henry Knight, chief of the bureau of agricultural chemistry and engineering, describes the function of his new organization as a combination of three kinds of research. One is finding new facts about the substances he is dealing with. That is the kind of thing that goes on in the laboratory of the professor of physics. Another is improving and controlling the quality of a product and lowering the cost of its manufacture. That is the kind of research a manufacturing concern carries on.

Then there is the third type of experimentation which an industry developing new products follows, the attempt to discover and develop tatoes, poultry and poultry products, vegetables and wheat."

And he is co-operating with the frozen-pack laboratory, located in Seattle. "One thing we did recently, Mr. Swenson told us, "was to prepare an entire dinner of frozen pack foods — including chicken stuffed with frozen dressing."

In the Philadelphia laboratory, Dr. P. A. Wells is in charge: "One of the things we are working on is apples," he reports, "better ways of making apple juice for the market."

And tobacco—new nicotine compounds to kill insects and prevent plant diseases. Milk is another study in the East—making better casein products. Casein is used now chiefly in paper sizing. Lard is being studied, too, and like soybeans and other products, it is valuable in making plastics.

In the Peoria laboratory, corn, corn-stalks, corn cobs, are the chief interest. Their cellulose content is being studied. They have real possibilities for making synthetic rubber for example, says Director O. E. May.

Washington's Foresight A Boon to Nation's Capital

This year, as usual, at the season of his birthday, George Washington was lauded throughout the land for his many gifts to the nation. Few realize the role he played in creating the capital city which is named after him.

It seems today as if he actually possessed the ability to see into the future when he accepted the city plan of Pierre Charles L'Enfant, the young Frenchman who had followed Lafayette to this country and distinguished himself as an engineer in the Revolution. For to most of the people of that day L'Enfant's scheme was a madman's dream.

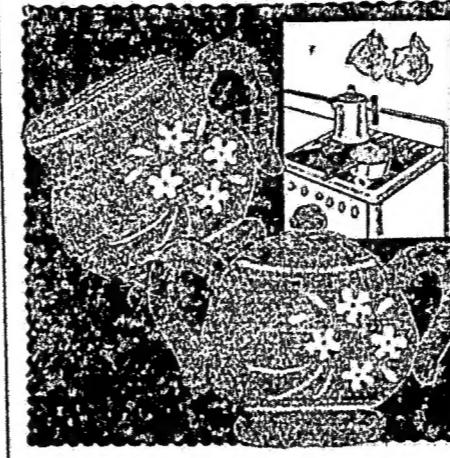

When the landowners of the acres that were to comprise the capital heard about streets of 100 to 110 feet wide and an avenue 400 feet wide and a mile long, they said L'Enfant was crazy to waste this land that might be sold as building lots.

Today many Washingtonians valiantly protest when streets with a line of trees on both sides of the sidewalks are widened between curbs to allow for the congested automobile traffic. But if it had not been for L'Enfant's planning of wide streets and the active support which he received from President Washington, this widening of the pavement today would have been impossible. Now, at least, one line of trees can be preserved.

FAR EAST: Pressure

Japan, under terrific pressure from the Axis, moved her fleet down toward the South Pacific and made strong demands for privileges of exploitation of territory on the Dutch East Indies.

Four powers, Australia, Britain, The Netherlands and the United States, simultaneously put the pressure on Japan, and there was little indication which way the "cat would jump" whether Japan would be prodded into open war on the Axis side, or would back down precipitately.

Britain warned Japan that her moves against the Dutch East Indies would be considered in the light of a warlike act.

Australia echoed this, and held a special secret cabinet meeting to discuss defensive action against Japan.

The Netherlands government, in London, ordered all ships in East Indian waters or neighborhoods to put at once into neutral ports, a usual prelude to warfare.

The United States issued to all Americans in China and Japan a third and peremptory warning to leave immediately.

Quick was the response from Japan, but once again the response showed the nation is divided, and there were reports that there were so many Axis agents in positions of power in Tokyo that the Japanese government was in reality little more than a puppet.

The first evidence that the pressure from the four powers was taking effect came from official Japanese sources. In the form of a statement that the fleet movements had only been to keep order in Thailand-Indo-Chinese territory, and that no warlike measures against the South Pacific were intended.

But the very next day, after President Roosevelt had had a long, personal and serious talk with Ambassador Nomura, the only announcement from which was that he had stressed the necessity of friendly relations, one Japanese newspaper printed an editorial comment that Nomura was "confronted with an impossible task."

On this fire the Italian and German papers heaped oil, one Rome dispatch saying that American activities in the Pacific were definitely threatening to Japan and could only result in war.

This map shows where the lightning is expected to strike in the Far East. All indications point to an early attempt by Japan to extend her "New Order" in Asia to the south. Britain reports that she has made approaches to her great naval base, Singapore, which is the main obstacle in the path of Japanese expansion. Biggest question marks now are: (1) Can Japan successfully attack Singapore? (2) Can the U. S. stand by while the Japanese spread south?

The "activities" referred to were contracts awarded for the fortification of Pacific bases, more than $1,700,000 alone to be spent at Guam, a base at which the Japanese have been looking sideways for a long time.

But if these "activities" were threatening, the Axis powers had something new to get excited about when Great Britain announced that she had mined the sea lanes in the vicinity of Singapore, her important oriental naval base. While the brief government notice to mariners giving the boundaries of the mined areas gave no explanation as to why the move was made, it was generally believed that the British feared a Japanese thrust in Asia so timed as to create diversion while Italy and Germany harassed Great Britain with some new activity elsewhere.

WAR:

Balkan Crisis

Moving of 400,000 to 600,000 Nazi troops into Rumania and according to unconfirmable reports, many thousands into Bulgaria brought matters in the Balkans to a terrible pressure crisis.

Little Bulgaria was merely a pawn in the war game, not one authority believing for a moment that she could or would make any substantial effort to halt what looked like an obvious move on the part of Germany to send an overpowering blow against Greece.

That the British success in Africa and the Greek success in Albania was to receive an answer from Hitler seemed certain. That answer began not only to take form but to assume critical proportions.

Britons Move Out

First definite action-move was the removal of all British diplomats from Rumania. This was closely followed by a statement from official British quarters that Rumanian trade would be barred.

This seemed a last forerunner to a bombing of Rumanian oil fields and Germany's troops and communications, in other words, to the entry into the war terrains of Rumanian lands, although the country and government were technically out.

The next definite steps were taken by Russia and Turkey. The Soviet, which had been viewing askance the movements by the Nazi hordes into Rumania and toward the mouth of the Danube, moved its fleet into waters from which action in that quarter might be taken, either as an ally or an enemy of Turkey.

Turkey Takes Stand

Meanwhile the Turks took their stand, concentrating what military power they had as near the Bulgarian frontier as possible. In the same movement they announced their intention not to sit "passively by" and let Germany move troops into Bulgaria and thence against Salonika.

But then came an announcement that a Bulgarian-Turkish non-aggression pact had been signed which would indicate that the Turks were avoiding any chance of breaking the peace with the Axis powers.

The Greeks were holding the Italians either at a standstill or were moving them backward steadily as this series of startling and critical events took place.

The British at the same time were not idle, but boldly called their naval vessels into action in the Mediterranean and Adriatic seas, shelled northwestern Italian ports, and dropped parachutists (the first they had used in the war) into southern Italy for the purpose of cutting water supplies and communications.

With regard to the success or failure of this effort, only the conflicting reports coming from Italy could tell, as the British were silent. The first Italian report was that all the parachutists had been captured before they could do serious damage.

Later, however, an unexplained dispatch stated that Italy had halted all rail traffic to and from the affected area. This was taken in some quarters to mean that some of the British air soldiers had succeeded in cutting the railway lines.

Treated as Soldiers

Italian sources said that as the British paratroopers were clad in regular uniforms, they would be treated as prisoners of war and not as spies.

British sources, though they admitted the raid had been made, declined any details. Speculative dispatches from London, however, recalled that Germany and Soviet Russia had pioneered in this type of attack, and hinted that the British airmen sought to break the 132-mile long Apulian aqueduct.

The only official hint was that the attack was "directed at communications affecting certain ports."

This whole situation gave rise to one more theory, that it might mean that Germany had temporarily abandoned any plan for a channel invasion, preferring to aid Mussolini.

In other circles, however, this was taken with a grain or two of salt, as it was believed perhaps this was another typical Nazi "feint" designed to draw England's attention away from her own coasts.

BATTLE OF BRITAIN: West Front

Whether the British believed that Germany was "feinting" in the Middle East and the Balkans or not, no stone was being left unturned by the RAF to attempt to assume mastery of the air on the western front.

A long succession of raids was carried out on channel or "invasion" ports, growing in intensity, while the Nazi raids were becoming less and less intense, leading to a conviction in England that Hitler's men were resting for what might be the decisive attack by air of the war.

In one raid the British airmen dropped bombs and incendiaries from Ostend to Boulogne hour after hour, working in waves, until watchers on the Kentish coast reported miles and miles of the opposing coastline to be in flames.

The weather was clear and the thousands standing on the British cliff-tops had a fine view of the attack, which, though it took place at night, was brilliantly illuminated by German searchlights, by bomb-flares and by the resulting fires.

As the airmen went over the heads of the watchers and came back from the scene of action, ferrying their loads of death and destruction over the channel, enormous cheers rose from the watching throngs.

The anti-aircraft barrage all along the coast seemed to the witnesses more powerful than any seen before, giving rise to the belief that perhaps this would be the main center of Nazi activity in the spring, not in the Balkans.

AFRICA: Record Drive

The history-making sweep of the British armies, together with what aid has been offered by African forces, guerrilla bands of natives and the Free French under DeGaulle, continued apace and seemed about to make history as the greatest single advance of armed forces in the history of human warfare.

The British forces were moving rapidly into Tripolitania on the one hand, and down on the Indian ocean and the shores of the Red sea they were making advances into Eritrea in a pincer movement in which army, navy and air force were co-operating.

The breakup of the Italian armed force in northern Africa was apparently complete, and the populace of Cyrenaica in Libya was settling down under British rule and some semblance of orderly government was returning.

The British were shooting looters, and while there were some few murders of Italian settlers by native blacks, these were infrequent, as most of the Italians had either fled or had sought protection under the British rule.

The armies under Wavell, generally called the Middle East command, were in a most anomalous position, however, for while they were rapidly occupying the whole of Mussolini's African empire, their supremacy depended entirely on their command of the Mediterranean sea and airways.

LEASE-LEND: Progress

One chief interest on the "home front" was the progress of the lease-lend bill, H. R. 1776, which reached the Senate and found there a bitter battle than it did on the house floor, but was expected to pass by better than a two-one vote.

Senators Wheeler and Johnson were leading the fight, with aid from many witnesses before the foreign relations committee, but the general result was only the adoption by the committee of seven amendments brought forward in the house, all but one of them with administration approval.

This was the sole dividend to which enemies of the bill could point,

The only amendment adopted without White House sanction was the one which provided that any given contract of aid might be cancelled by concurrent resolution of house and senate.

Missions

Featuring the aid to Britain moves in this country was the passage back and forth across the Atlantic a long series of missions, starting with Harry Hopkins and Wendell Willkie, and extending to a three-man chemistry mission headed by President Conant of Harvard university.

One of Dr. Conant's aides was to return with him "to expedite scientific information" to the United States for use in the national defense plan. The other, however, was to remain in England as a permanent secretary of the mission.

Defense statisticians revealed that of 2,800 planes for military purposes manufactured in this country last year, only 400 went to the United States armed forces, stressing the fact that aid-to-Britain was the order of the day well in advance of the expected passage of the bill.

Occurrences That Affect the Dinner Pails, Dividend Checks and Tax Bills of Every Individual. National and International Problems Inseparable from Local Welfare.

In future years, historians will record the swift changes that took place in the temper and attitude of the American people and their leaders during 1940 and 1941. Looking back now on the months that followed the outbreak of World War II, it seems as if we lived then in another world. The majority of the people wanted neutrality—and they wanted no part of Europe's newest mess. They wanted to avoid the risk of war at all costs. And the statesmen who represented them felt the same way.

Today the polls show that we still want to keep out of war—but that a considerable majority, despite that, favor helping England to the fullest extent even if it involves the risk of being drawn into the war. No one of neutrality—it is as dead as Moses. The cash-and-carry policy has been virtually forgotten—it is perfectly clear that every financial resource will be used to help arm Britain no less than ourselves. The American people, in short, are violently partisan, and the American nation is definitely involved in the war.

What has caused this change? It took us almost three years to become really anti-German in the last war—it took us less than a year this time. Better communication, both verbal and visual, has been a factor. So has the amazing courage of the British people the Americans like and respond to any display of bravery against odds. has been the fast-growing feeling that our destiny and Britain's are inter-mixed and inseparable, and Most important, in all probability that if Britain falls we will be in grave danger.

There are those who stoutly belie this doctrine, but they are much in the minority. The President obviously thinks that Britain is fighting for us as well as for herself. So do most members of Congress. So do the bulk of the leading commentators. So does a long list of principal daily newspapers. That is why opposition to the lend-lease bill has made so little progress. There just isn't enough support behind it.

Last chance or defeating or seriously modifying the bill—and, at best, it was an extremely frail chance died when Wendell Willkie took the stand. Mr. Willkie received 22,000,000 American votes last November, only 4,000,000 less than the President. His trip to England in which he crammed months of visiting, talking and investigating into a few days and nights, was a dramatic pilgrimage. He made a fine impression abroad. While he has lost some of his past supporters, he has gained new friends and followers. So when Willkie said he was 100% in favor of the bill, with certain modifications, and went even farther than the President in some respects (by suggesting that we give Britain outright destroyers and army bombers) the die was cast.

The two men who were given the votes of close to 50,000,000 Americans in their race for the presidency, and who stand out head and shoulders above any other national figures of this day, believe that England's fate and our fate cannot be separated. There is no doubt of their sincerity—even as there is no doubt of the sincerity of those who still hold to a different and opposed point of view. And there is no doubt that this country is committed to the hilt to the policy for which Roosevelt and Hitler stand.

Today millions of Americans hate Hitler and what he represents with an almost personal hatred. For Mussolini they have contempt and laughter. These millions of Americans feel that the dictators are their enemies, just as they are England's enemies. The old crimes and mistakes of imperial England have been forgotten. And in the opinion of many a thoughtful student, we ourselves are about to embark, from necessity, on an unprecedented imperial policy of our own.

It is forecast that the Treasury will not offer any new tax proposals until late Spring. By then, it should have a fairly good idea of how much the lend-lease bill, plus our own rearmament, is going to cost, and how much of the total it is advisable to pay for as we go.

Higher direct and indirect taxes are, of course, considered inevitable in informed circles. That means further upping of the income tax rate in all brackets, and perhaps further lowering of exemptions. It also may mean new taxes on commodities, to be collected at the source rather than from the consumer.

The sales tax has many supporters. So far, this tax has been proposed by the Administration, but some feel that it will eventually be accepted as a matter of necessity. State sales taxes have proven tremendous and dependable revenue producers. A national sales tax should go a long way toward meeting the arms bill.

ALLIES!

Crown Prince Olav of Norway, after an inspection, is shown leaving a destroyer of the Royal Norwegian Navy now serving with the Allies. With 4,000,000 tons of merchant shipping the Royal Norwegian Government's contribution to the Allied fight for freedom is invaluable in the transport of supplies to the British front. Though the vessel is not identified it might be the "Sleipner" which has constantly raided German-controlled Norwegian ports, captured oil and food supplies ear-marked for the Nazis and returned to the attack of German shipping.
